INDIA OF MY DREAMS

India is a country famous for its rich diversity and culture, a country where different religions live together and is well known for its ancient heritage and ethics. But today, India is known for her shortcomings rather than her strengths.

Population explosion is a major concern today. It has a drastic effect on the environment leading to deforestation that endangers the habitat of our precious flora and fauna. Trees are cut down and concrete forests emerge. Population expansion leads to rising pollution, indirectly affecting all human beings. We pollute the air we breathe and the water we drink. High population gives rise to unemployment, scarcity of resources and widespread diseases.

Religion divides us and castes discriminate. Most communal problems are caused by these differences. It makes us into our own enemies and weakens the bond of togetherness.

The India I have been dreaming of is completely different from today's scenario. The India of my dreams is beautiful and friendly. The rivers and seas have clear blue water. Population helps in national development rather than hindering its progress. Religion binds us together and caste differences are abolished. Our government performs their duties responsibly for the development of the nation. Gender equality exists between men and women and girl child education is a priority. Cities and villages have good infrastructure and resources are well utilized by all.

That's why they call it a dream. I know many of these things aren't possible at this moment but we can certainly strive for it, if we all work together for progress. I hope to see the India of my dreams taking shape sometime in the future.

AN UNFORGETTABLE EXPERIENCE

The best experience in my life was when I went home on my fortnightly vacation. The final countdown ended the day I boarded the flight and landed at Delhi airport at 0530 hrs. My parents were eagerly awaiting my arrival. On spotting them I could see the happiness in their eyes. I hugged them and got a little emotional; meeting them after five and a half months.

We went out for dinner that night and my vacation began. We enjoyed every moment we spent together. My mother and I sat for hours talking about all sorts of things. Every day we went out; one of them being a visit to my father's factory.

I met all my friends and went on morning rides. I attended my school Alumni Meet and relived the good times. My school teachers wished me good luck for a bright and prosperous future. I wish time could have stopped at that very moment because the good moments were ending too soon.

Unfortunately I fell ill for a few days with a viral infection, but I didn't miss out on the time I spent with my mother who nursed me back to my normal self. She is indeed my strength, who has molded me into a real gentleman. She did everything I wished for, just to make my vacation a memorable one. How time flew!

Soon I was packing my things to come back to my second home. I was sad and felt emotionally low. My mother encouraged me that gave me the strength to challenge the next six months of my training.

On 14th January I bade goodbye to my family and left for the airport, accompanied by my mother. I felt emotional but her continuous words of encouragement were all I paid attention too. She told me, our loved ones will always be our strength and never our weakness. She consoled me to stay positive when she saw tears in my eyes. She promised to come and meet me soon. I touched her feet and hugged her before I said goodbye.

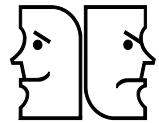

Time flew. The fortnightly vacation was over and all that was left were unforgettable memories that will last for a lifetime.
